Some Good Farming

Last evening we were invited into Mr. B. J. Abbott's garden for a stroll. Of course we accepted. Now, this garden is right near the walk between our office and residence but we had never been inside and our stroll was a revelation. Peaches, pears, apples, apricots, figs, pecans, walnuts and grapes are there in profusion and some of these are as fine as you would wish to see. And there are vegetables galore—cabbage, lettuce, turnips, onions, potatoes, strawberries, peas, okra, squash, beets, canteloupes, cucumbers, and nearly everything one would grow to eat, as well as several herbs used in medicine and formerly grown in most southern gardens. Besides there are many rare and beautiful flowers, too numerous to mention were we sufficiently familiar with them to do so.

This garden is in an L shape with field crops at either end. Alfalfa to the east and wheat to the south. The fourth crop of alfalfa is now coming on and the wheat has already been harvested and it was fine, this land has already been planted to corn and peas, while the alfalfa comes on continuously and furnishes green feed for what cattle and hogs he keeps at home and they are fed, too.

Now, don't get the notion that this is a field. It is somewhere about one acre all told, perhaps just a little more, but it was properly prepared, well cultivated and is a source of pleasure and profit to its owner. Apparently the trees make no shade and the plants require but room to stand. Here can be seen agricultural and horticultural demonstrations that would open the eyes of many farmers as regards the possibilities of this soil. What Mr. Abbott is doing could be done by every man here if he would only use his head and hands, for this plot of ground has no natural advantages over any other spot hereabouts. Why not more of this intensive farming?
